Eban Repeats: Direct Talks Only

CANADA FIGHTING FOR MIDEAST PEACE

Moscow in New Libel Against Israel

ALLEGES JERUSALEM-BONN PACT ON NUCLEAR ARMS COOPERATION

West Germany and Israel are working on joint development of nuclear weapons, the Soviet military newspaper, "Red Star," has alleged.

Writers I. Ivanov and P. Popov said West Germany was using supposedly peaceful atomic research assistance to other countries as a "smokescreen" to cover plans to become "co-owner of the nuclear bomb."

"Israel has become one such partner for Bonn," the paper said. "They are two imperialist vultures who have lifted rabid militarism and annexation of foreign territories to the level of their official policy."

400 EXPERTS

The paper claimed that 50 scientists and 400 military experts from West Germany were cooperating with Israel in nuclear research. Work on nuclear weapons was being conducted mainly at Rehovot and Dimona in Israel, it stated.

Many Israeli specialists were studying in Karlsruhe and Hamburg, Germany, the paper added, and nuclear research in both countries was being directed by a "special organ set up at the Max Planck Institute of Nuclear Research in Heidelberg."

Fights Recognition Of "Conservatives"

Buenos Aires, (JCNS) A proposal by the former president of the Buenos Aires Ashkenazi kehilla, Elimelech Gutkin, that newly founded Conservative and Liberal communities should be brought into the Vaad Hakehilot, the umbrella organisation of Jewish community organisations, has provoked a sharp attack from the Chief Rabbi, Dr. David Kahana.

Mr. Gutkin had said that such a move would recognise the reality of the present situation. But Rabbi Kahana alleged that the Conservative and Liberal communities were responsible for "watering down" Judaism. He warned that he would not under any circumstances recognise conversions to Judaism authorised by these communities.

Conservative and Liberal Judaism have been making progress in Argentina in recent years. One Liberal and four Conservative congregations have been established, all in Buenos Aires. Attempts are being made to establish other congregations in the provinces.

Ottawa Does Not Expect Jerusalem To Become Again A Divided City

Martin Hopes For U.N. Role In New Mediation

by The Canadian Jewish News Diplomatic Editor

United Nations, New York (exclusive to The Canadian Jewish News). - The Canadian Government will not pressure the Government of Israel into abandoning Jerusalem to an unknown fate, a most reliable source told this newspaper. Ottawa agrees fully with the United States' position and with the stand taken by other powers interested in peace in the Middle East, namely that Israel's demand for direct talks with its neighbors is logical and should be supported.

Asked by a representative of The Canadian Jewish News whether the present Canadian position on Jerusalem's future signifies a change in Canada's attitude since its vote for the Pakistani Resolution protesting the arbitrary annexation of East Jerusalem, a high Canadian official told us:

"Canada did not vote against the annexation of Old Jerusalem by Israel because it believes the Israelis would evacuate it but because it opposed the manner in which this was effectuated. Canada considers guarantees for free access and some extraterritorial rights for religious presence in Jerusalem imperative; but no one at this stage is naive to the point of being able to turn the clock back."

WILL SUPPORT "MEDIATOR PLAN"

This official, when speaking to The Canadian Jewish News, repeated that Canada would support the appointment of a mediator in the Middle East situation. The proposal originally came from the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. George Brown. Yet it seems Israel would not discuss such a recommendation. Furthermore Israel, according to the address made on Monday by its Foreign Minister, Abba Eban, would not consider publishing any peace plan other than conjunction with direct talks with one or more Arab governments.

Mr. Eban made it clear that Israel will present specific, intangible proposals "compatible with its sovereign rights" and "with the interests and national dignity of all Middle Eastern states."

Israel's Foreign Minister also stated that any Arab state negotiating with Israel will improve its own prospects of stability and economic progress, and will help advance the general progress and welfare of the entire region.

CANADA'S POSITION APPRECIATED

It seems that during a conference with Canada's Foreign Minister, Mr. Paul Martin, the Israelis explained this position to Ottawa. The conference, this newspaper learns, took place on the highest level.

It is further understood that Israel, while not always agreeing with the position of Canada or, for that matter, with that of the United States, really appreciates the role of Canada's Foreign Minister at the United Nations.

According to some Israelis, Mr. Martin, because of his diplomatic tact and his unusual adroitness in negotiation, slowly is emerging as the man of the hour at the United Nations. He is determined against all odds, as is Prime Minister Pearson, to have this General Assembly move forward in the direction of peace by securing the rights and existence of all states involved.

As for Israel, following the developments at the United Nations, it considers the speech by Russia's Foreign Minister Andre Gromyko less inflamatory than the previous Soviet interventions at the United Nations.

Yet Jerusalem's representatives here regret the position of "immobility" taken by both Arabs and Russians, which means that Israel may be forced against its desires to remain indefinitely at the present ceasefire lines.

As Foreign Minister Eban said this week at the United Nations, the Jewish State is ready for this eventuality into which it is coerced; but it has not renounced its hope of negotiated peace.

NO RETURN

Here at the United Nations it is clear that not only the United States but Canada and other powers as well with no special interests in the Middle East realize that the Middle East will not return to its pre-June 5th borders. Furthermore the Israeli position -- that the country cannot return to the "perils and solitude," in the words of Mr. Eban, which preceded the Six Days War -- is obvious.

A Canadian leader told this newspaper that at the moment what transpired before really is not important. For it is true that public opinion in every free country upholds the Israeli position.

Of course, Washington and Ottawa would like to see some flexibility on the part of both the Jews and Arabs, and also an end to the intransigence of Russia, which is an obstacle to direct negotiations.

This Canadian spokesman also informed us that Israel's position, in asking for direct negotiations, is "proper". This is a minimum demand for it is based upon the desire to establish communication with the opponents.

"PARALYSIS OF MOVEMENT"

All other developments, including international guarantees for Jerusalem's holy places, would follow naturally this Canadian official said. When asked by this reporter whether he believes Israel really wants peace, he answered:

"Canada does not doubt it."

Another development at the United Nations is the obvious dissatisfaction on the part of the Arabs with Gromyko's statement.

All in all, the situation at the United Nations depicts the same paralysis of movement which characterized that body prior to June 5th when Israel was isolated in its demand for reopening the international waterways.

• Commentary •

By M. J. Nurenberger

NO ONE BUT ISRAEL

Nothing adds more strength to Israel's determination to negotiate with the Arabs themselves than the incidents caused by foreign agents recently.

Ever since the end of the Six Days War, every student of the Middle East is aware that there can be no return to the archaic armistice-agreements never observed by the Arab governments.

The Jordanians, the "most moderate" among Israel's neighbors (according to Great Britain), never observed the obligation to guarantee free access to the holy places for Jews. Under the Jordanian regime, all Jewish religious sites in the Old City, except for the Wailing Wall, were either destroyed or desecrated. For the first time in the Holy Land, a hallowed cemetery, that on the Mount of Olives, jeeringly was defiled. Some of the most beautiful synagogues were destroyed.

The world has forgotten that the Old City never had been purely Moslem or Arab. A large section was inhabited by Jews until Jordan took over.

The United Nations never intervened to enforce the agreements signed by Jordan or any other Arab country.

* * * * *

I remember putting a question to the UN representative in Jerusalem in 1950 about my rights to visit the Wailing Wall. The commissioner very diplomatically answered with the traditional "technical difficulties" in the presence of hundreds of reporters.

This one-sided defense of Arab against Jews has been the United Nations policy from its very inception. I should say it was the policy of UN officials in a strange "impartiality", always critical of those who did not attack their neighbors, who did not organize guerilla incursions, who did not support infiltrators and who did not close international waterways.

* * * * *

In 1956 Israel, following a successful intervention at the Suez, retreated again believing that the UN would enforce some kind of free passage-way.

The Arab chauvinistic governments, however, observed agreements so long as is suited them. They ignored or denounced them according to the ephemeral mood of the dictator in power.

Why then should Israel relinquish its present position of strength and return to a dangerous situation which prevailed before June 5th? Isn't what the Israelis maintain true — that the moment it evacuates its present positions, the Arabs will begin to harrass the people? And if the Arabs have no intentions of harrassing them, why don't they sit down and work out a peace agreement?

* * * * *

It is apparent to me that Jerusalem for the time being has ended its flirtation with and "yessing" of the UN aparatus.

For nineteen years the United Nations never pursued earnestly its duty to establish contacts between Jews and Arabs. In fact, it was the third party, the United Nations, that actually prevented these direct contacts. Had there been no UN committees, commissions and investigating teams, the Arabs would have had to talk to Israel.

* * * * *

On June 4th the world was ready to give up Israel with a sigh, as it had the lives of six million Jews in Hitler-Europe.

Israel will not tolerate, I am sure, a repetition of a United Nations illusionary, peacemaking role. This was made clear by Eban on Monday.

At this point I know Israel will not budge unless the Arabs finally realize no one will change the situation for the better — no one except Israel which honestly wants to improve the political, economic and cultural reality of the Middle East.

Cardinal Suenens, the Primate of Belgium, and Cardinal Rossi, Arch-bishop of Sao Paulo, were guests last week at a session of the fifth Latin American B'nai B'rith convention.

The Governor, Mayor and Archbishop of Sao Paulo were all represented at the opening session when the B'nai B'rith human rights medal was awarded to a non-Jew, Dr. Julio de Mesquita Filho.

He is the editor of the leading local daily newspaper, "O Estado de Sao Paulo," a veteran fighter for democratic rights and president of the Inter-American Press association. He is the first Brazilian to receive the award.

Free Tuition To Volunteers

Tel Aviv, (JCNS) About 80 young people who volunteered for emergency civilian aid service in Israel as a result of the Middle East crisis have been accepted for a year's free tuition at Bar-Ilan University.

By the time the university opens for the autumn term, it is believed that the number of volunteers starting the courses will reach 100.

The scheme has been made possible by special funds from abroad. The young people are exempt from paying a one-year tuition fee; dormitory accommodation is provided almost free and pocket money is supplied if necessary.

This programme is available to the young volunteers on condition that they have studied already at an institute of higher learning. All faculties are open to them.

The volunteers accepted represent 25 countries, including three from the Soviet Union. There is also one non-Jewish student.

Last week two ulpanim opened at Bar-Ilan University and at the Technion, in Haifa, for volunteers and others. The courses have been organised by the Council for Higher Studies in co-operation with the Jewish Agency.

The course at the Technion has been arranged for students without any knowledge of Hebrew; that at Bar-Ilan University for persons with a little background knowledge of the subject.

New Split Among U.S. Zionists

HADASSAH, ZOA FEUDING

New York, (JCNS) The chasm between America's two largest Zionist groups, Hadassah and the Zionist Organisation of America (Z.O.A.) widened last week with the announcement that their joint youth organisation, Young Judea, had decided to operate solely under Hadassah's wing.

The president of the Z.O.A., Jacques Torczyner, told the JCNS correspondent here that the move was "not in the best interests of the youth but was taken for political reasons".

He said that his organisation would now "build" its own youth movement, and he questioned the right of young Judea to continue using that name because it represented a joint organisation and not Hadassah alone.

Hadassah is a member of the Haleprin-Goldstein Confederation of General Zionists and the Z.O.A. is a consitutent part of the Neuman organisation of similar name.

The battle over Young Judea has been brewing for more than a year after Hadassah announced that it would take over the organisation. Officials of the women's organisation, who were on their way to Miami Beach for their annual convention, could not be reached for comment.

Young Judea is the oldest and largest Zionist youth movement in America, with about 10,000 members in twenty regions. The age of members ranges from nine to 18 years.

Vatican Criticizes Arab Summit

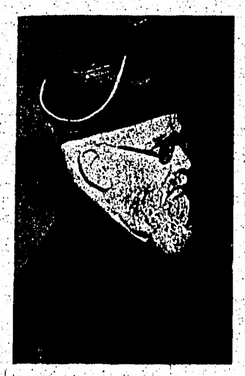
Rome, (JCNS) A sceptical view of the recent Khartoum conference is taken by the editor of the Vatican weekly "Osservatore della Domenica" in a leading article which appeals for conciliation between the peoples of the Middle East.

The editor, Federico Alessandrini, comments:

"International observers have considered as 'moderate' the conclusions reached at Khartoum. Actually, the only aspect of that encounter which may be considered positive is that the 'summit' did not further worsen a situation already sufficiently grave. However, the refusal to recognise the Jewish State and its right to exist remain. And the rejection of direct negotiations also remains"

This, the first article on the Middle East to appear in a Vatican paper in several weeks, makes no mention of the status of the Holy Places nor does it repeat the Vatican call for the internationalisation of Jerusalem.

Those familiar with the Vatican scene know that, on occasion, Vatican silences and omissions are more eloquent than words.



APPEALS TO WORLD JEWRY – Chief Rabbi Yitzhak Nissim of Israel, who has issued a special Rosh Hashana message calling upon Jews outside Israel "to strengthen the state and the people in Zion by purchasing Israel Bonds; if they already have done so, this year they should increase their purchases since there is more to be done than ever before."

"...Every Jew whom the Lord has granted a good living should help strengthen the economy of our state by buying Israel Bonds. I wish the whole House of Israel a new year of return -- to Israel and to the Almighty."

ORTHODOXY EMERGING ON CAMPUS

By our JCNS Correspondent
New York

"To the amazement of their elders, a new and militant Orthodoxy is emerging" among many Jewish university students, according to Rabbi Albert H. Friedlander, formerly counsellor to Jewish students at Columbia University here and now the minister of a Liberal congregation in Wembley, London.

Rabbi Friedlander's views are contained in "Never Trust a God Over Thirty," a book published here last week, of which he is the editor and to which he contributes an essay. The other contributors are the Catholic and Protestant advisers to students at the university, and two students there, one of them a Jew.

All six clergymen represented in the book, which is published by McGraw-Hill, are concerned with the "alienation" of youth from traditional values and the consequent widespread rejection of organised religion.

IDENTIFICATION

Rabbi Friedlander says that there is a new, strong identification with Judaism among Jewish students.

One of the Catholic counsellors, Mgr. James E. Rea, asserts that Catholic students are perhaps less closely bound to and less closely identified with their Church than they once were, partially because more and more of the bright Catholic students are taking advantage of the scholarships and other opportunities offered by non-Catholic universities, thus dispersing the Catholic group.

The Rev. Lyman T. Lundeen, a Protestant, feels: "There is a powerful tendency on the part of students in the university to identify religion with the traditional . . . Religion is interpreted as a repressive phenomenon and as an illegitimate justification for dealing with the radically new problems of our time according to old-fashioned rules."

The chapter by the two students, Mr. John H. Cushman and Mr. Lawrence Susskind, bears out what the clergymen say about the student attitude towards tradition and the establishment and provides a coherent explanation of the "new morality."

HONESTY

They discuss the emphasis that today's youth places on "communication" between peoples and show how the feeling of communication can lead to a new type of religious experience.

"If the students find honesty in the struggle with 'ultimate concerns,' it will be impossible to agree that God is dead," they say. "We are searching for a 'God beyond God,' and a God who will give meaning to the relationships of this world."

letters to the editor

THE REDS ARE NOT COMING

Dear Editor:

Some of my best friends have been supporters of various radical organizations. They always sympathized with the leftist regimes in Europe. Recently they feel a little embarrassed by their political associations. So they tell me that some Communists here have repented and publicly denounced Soviet Russia.

I checked a few issues of the Communist weeklies here, those appearing in Yiddish and English. I noticed that, while the Yiddish publication has been trying to throw off responsibility for what happened regarding Russia, the English language organ of the Communist party defends the Soviet Union and licks the boots of those who would exterminate the Jewish people.

I read in The Canadian Jewish News that Arnold Zweig refused to sign an anti-Israeli statement in East Berlin. Why is it that we never hear from all leftist and pink agitators in the Jewish community about the movement to mobilize public opinion against Czechoslovakia and Russia? Is it not true that what the Communist now are doing could be of graver consequence for Jews than a speech by John Beattie? What happened to all these vocal rabblerousers who were present whenever someone made a Fascist statement? Are they out of business when Fascist action is undertaken by Communist states? What happened to all these anti-Nazi organizations? Are Czechoslovakia, Poland, Russia immune in a conspiracy which threatens the very existence of the Jewish state?

I walk every day through Nathan Phillips Square in the hope of finding these would-be leaders. But it seems they have taken an extended vacation.

For the Preservation of Unity

THE TASKS OF THE COMMUNITY

The Six-Day-War has created a new climate of unity among Jews the world over, including those here in Canada. This unity has manifested itself in an unusual expression of solidarity with the people dwelling in Zion. Yet everyone realizes — and everybody hopes — no such emergencies will be repeated in order to impose consolidation facing danger.

Why can't it be possible for a mature community to remain united in the pursuit of other tasks such as obtaining more support for Jewish education, for consolidating our school system, for demonstrating our will to live as Jews and to continue our tradition?

These are days when every Jew, regardless of synagogue affiliation, is preparing for annual, traditional self-examination. It is the season of the High Holy Days when one strikes the balance of one's performance in the past year.

We believe such a balance sheet is necessary not only for the individual but also for an organized collectivity. Let us examine our community — conscience, our community-objectives; let us maintain the spirit of unison not regarding Israel only but also when working for our future right here.

COLD SHOULDER FROM PROTESTANT SCHOOL BOARD

The cold shoulder reportedly given representatives of the Committee for Montreal's Tax Supported Jewish Schools last week has awakened the Jewish community and may inspire it to rethinking of its cultural requirements. It may raise the question whether Montreal Jews should continue their link with the Protestant Board.

According to the Montreal Star, the representatives of this Committee were refused a hearing by Mr. Peter Millar, chairman of the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal. Also the reporter of the Star, in a curious manner and style unbefitting this century, says this delegation included "about ten bearded, black robed, orthodox rabbis" who "trooped into the board room while the meeting was in progress." Also, says the Star reporter in a strange, journalistic description of what transpired, this delegation "sat omiously on the sidelines."

Some Montrealers interested in Jewish education now ask:

Should the role of a Jewish community, the largest in Canada, a community that has contributed so much to the development of Canada's greatest metropolis, be relegated to an appendix of the outmoded, outdated and archaic Anglo-Saxon Protestant Establishment? Who is the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal, the parents ask?

"It speaks only for a minority of Montrealers" and "we fear it speaks for a minority which does not grasp what the new era in Quebec means. We are convinced that the Jews of Montreal have taken notice of this change."

It seems a number of Jews know their future in Montreal is interwoven with the future of Quebec's development in the field of culture and education and this development will not be determined by a clique ruling the Protestant board.

At this time it is difficult to state exactly whether the unfriendly reception given the delegation stems from the fact that somehow the Jewish community itself has not succeeded in establishing a united representation for this purpose. The last information about this problem was that the Canadian Jewish Congress had accepted the position demanding subsidies for Jewish schools.

Many wonder whether the Committee for Tax Supported Jewish Schools has approached the Canadian Jewish Congress for official intervention. Yet whether such a necessary step has or has not been taken, the lighter side-report in the Montreal Star has offended many a resident.

Also Mr. Millar wondered whether, under the recently passed Bill 37, the Protestant Board really is under obligation to support Jewish private schools.

The Canadian Jewish Congress, it is recalled, went on record for government subsidies for Jewish schools. Now, following the announcement of this position by the Protestant Board, some Jewish circles may ask that the Canadian Jewish Congress, as the representative of the Jewish community, finally take some action for the recognition of a Jewish school system in Montreal.

"I NO LONGER HATE GERMANS"

by Dr. L. H. Hardman

The Rev. Leslie H. Hardman, Minister of Britain's Hendon Synagogue, was the first Jewish Chaplain to enter Belsen after its liberation by British troops. The experience has remained indelibly with him, and he has been irreconcilably hostile to Germans. But now, he says: "I no longer hate Germans".

Since my experiences in the Belsen concentration camp and subsequent revelations of German bestiality, my condemnation of Germans has been vociferous and violent. "We must not forgive or forget", has been my constant refrain.

Whenever I heard intoned the memorial prayer for our six million dead tears cascaded down my cheeks. I persistently refused to visit Germany, to talk to Germans and disapproved of those who traded with that country.

During the past year or two, however, I began to accept the post-war generation of Germans, provided they expressed their disgust and shame at the bestial crimes committed by their seniors and provided they were determined to prevent their country ever again being controlled by the surviving sympathisers of Hitlerism.

One further reservation was that every German against whom there was evidence of criminal activities must be brought to justice and duly punished. When the Statute of Limitation was modified in this respect and reports published of more and more such criminals being given prison sentences, this sympathetic attitude towards latter-day Germans grew.

When several months ago I met a group of young Germans I was deeply impressed by the sincerity of their desire to cleanse their country, by their practical sympathy for Jews. Some of their friends had visited Israel and worked in kibbutzim, others were anxious to go.

Subsequently I supported their plea to be accepted as friends of the Jews and upholders of democracy. I did this to encourage them and similarly minded Germans to counteract the rise of neo-Nazism. Accepting their sincerity would encourage them in their fight. To shun them might well lead to disillusionment and frustration.

All this is now in limbo. I don't think of Germany any more, past or present. I don't mourn the six million dead any more.

What has happened to me is not easy to rationalise. I have always been deeply affected by the blood-caked pages of Jewish history. Our people, driven like chaff in the wind, defamed and degraded, seem to have survived by thinking of former days of glory and praying for their return, but doing little or nothing about it.

Being taken like sheep to the slaughter was a recurring experience. Martyrdom seemed something to be proud of. "Look from heaven and see how we have become a scorn and a derision . . we are accounted as sheep to be slain and destroyed, smitten and reproached . . . yet we have not forgotten thy Name . . . forget us not" (Prayer book).

But nothing happened from heaven. Our people went on praying and beseeching the Almighty, but pogrom and deportation continued unabated. Religious and cultural assimilation, given apostasy, was tried, but all ended in abject failure. Relief in the coming of the Messiah (however much he tarried) was urged. Meanwhile, the hatred of the Jew persisted, culminating in the destruction of nearly half the world's Jewish population.

The cry went up: Where was God? What has been our sin? Where was the "merit of the righteous" who are supposed to protect their generation?

Then another cry went up: Enough of this: We have a God-given country of our own, to which we must return. Only self-rule will solve our problem. That came in 1948. But it did not erase from my mind the memory of Jewish suffering, nor did Israel's glorious victory in 1956, won with the help of England and France.

But I was transformed by the events of last June, the mortal threat to Israel's existence, the dramatic victory accompanied by the unprecedented unity and spirit of solidarity of world Jewry.

No longer could I think in terms of the past. Possessed of a forward look, I became convinced that with continued determination and action the restoration of our former glory was at hand.

I realised why God had performed these miracles for us and not for our forebears. He was waiting for us to go into action, as He once said to our ancestors on their departure from Egypt: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they should march forward".

For centuries we had been asking God "to show us a sign that he was with us", while all the time He wanted us to show Him a sign that we were with him.

Our greatest sin for which "we have been exiled from our land", was not desecrating the Sabbath, infringing kashrut and other laws, but our lack of pride in God having "chosen you from all peoples and given you a land for perpetual inheritance".

But I felt God was saying to us: "By your courageous deeds, for which I had long hoped, you have now expiated your sin".

Having achieved this is, to me, indicative of the arrival of the Messianic Era. And it is purposeless, even "sinful", to harp on past calamities by fasting or mourning, or by harbouring hatred for our former enemies. This, I believe, our martyred millions are saying, this is what we wanted, and not your tears and groans for our sad fate.

I have done enough crying, mourning and cursing our enemies - and that includes the Germans. God has shown me the way to acquire His nearness. I want to keep walking in that way, to the end of the road. I want to see the complete realisation of that ancient promise: "In thee and in thy seed shall be blessed all the families of the world".

ASK THE RABBI

A JCNS featurette

What is the reason for men wearing head cover in synagogue?

Covering the head is an ancient Oriental mark of respect. (Religion, said Solomon Schechter, is of the East.) While there is no harm in Jews adopting some Western standards of decorum it is undignified for them to ape non-Jewish worship by rejecting this traditional, formal symbol of "the fear of Heaven." There does not seem to be a strict Jewish law on this matter, but custom here is all-important.

Why do women sit in a separate gallery in Orthodox synagogues?

Originally in Jewish communities men and women sat separately at all communal and social occasions, on the grounds of tzeniut, "modesty," sexual propriety." While nowadays the sexes do mix on other occasions the separation is maintained in public worship, both as the traditional form of Jewish worship (marking it off from the worship of the Church) and because the proximity of the opposite sex is regarded as a distraction in prayer.

Is it right to send New Year greetings to an avel, that is, a person who has suffered a bereavement within the last year?

According to strict practice no greeting should be extended to a mourner during shiva, but if it is, the mourner responds. There is no restriction on greetings during the rest of the year of mourning. This is a time when good wishes appear to be most appropriate.

Why is white worn in synagogue on the High Holydays.

White represents purity, cleansing from sin, an appropriate symbol for the penitential season. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow (Isaiah 1, 18), Two further reasons have been suggested. In the Cabala white is the symbol of the Divine mercy. The white garment - the kittel - is really a shroud, reminding man of life's frailty and teaching him to "number his days" that he "may get a heart of wisdom."

What is the meaning of the succah?

Ye shall dwell in booths (succot) seven days . . . that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt. . . . (Leviticus 23, 42-43). The succah is thus a reminder of the Exodus and a symbol of Divine protection. Some of the ancient rabbis understood "booths" in the verse to mean, literally, huts. Others, more poetically, said that the reference was to the clouds of glory which surrounded the Israelites as they journeyed to the Promised Land.

MANESCU: POPULAR COMMUNIST

UNITED NATIONS, New York: - The new President of the U.N. General Assembly, Corneliu Manescu, is a lawyer and newspaperman turned diplomat. During World War 11 he was aguerrilla fighter. After the Communists ousted King Michael he became Deputy-Minister of Rumania's Armed Forces, with the rank of Lieutenant-General.

As a member of the Central Committee of the Rumanian Communist Party he was among the first to urge improved relations with the West and a loosening of ties with Moscow. Under this policy Rumania has maintained friendly relations with China and Mr. Manescu recently visited Peking.

Mr. Manescu, 51, is a tall, handsome and affable man. In 1936 he joined the Communist Party which was carrying on underground activities at that time, says a biographical note issued by the Rumanian mission at the U.N. He "carried on intense activity with the Student Democratic Front," the note said, and contributed to the anti-fascist press.

U.N. AND MID-EAST

From 1955 to 1960 Mr. Manescu was Vice-Chairman of the State Planning Committee. After brief terms as head of the Political Department in the Rumanian Foreign Ministry, and Ambassador to Hungary, he became Foreign Minister in 1961. He had headed the Rumanian delegations to the U.N. General Assembly each year since 1961. He also represented his country at the Geneva Disarmament talks and at other international conferences.

Besides his native language, Manescu is fluent in French and speaks passable English.

In an address to the General Assembly after his election on Tuesday, Mr. Manescu said that the Assembly's choice of a Communist President was "a recognition of a need for an equal participation by the various regions and systems in the work of the U.N.

Mr. Manescu said later at a press conference that he believed the U.N. could make a useful contribution towards achieving a "realistic solution" in the Middle East, a solution "that may satisfy all peoples in the area."

Economy of Israel

WHAT NEXT IN JERUSALEM?

By Baruch Ber

The most conspicuous change on the Israeli economic scene is the Government's decision to cut taxes.

This may have been the outcome of the "meeting of the millionaires" in Jerusalem last month, when the economic Ministers had to or it may be a natural result of the continuing slowdown, an attempt to prime the pumps of the economy.

But, whatever the reason, the fact is encouraging. Until now, generally speaking, there has been only one way for taxes to go in Israel - up.

Cuts in purchase tax announced recently will result in a loss of revenue amounting to about five million pounds. The items affected were mostly furniture, refrigerators and radio sets. The new rates are still many times higher than in most Western industrialised countries, but they are now much lower than before.

Another encouraging sign was the abolition of the 10 per cent full surcharge on September 5. It was imposed on June 5, the third day of the Six-Day War, for three months, and everyone expected the Government to ask for its extension.

The Finance Minister, Mr. Pinhas Sapir, has also displayed great understanding for other people's problems. At a meeting with Israeli industrialists he promised a sympathetic examination of the problems of depreciation, the writing-off of research expenditure and property tax. He told a group of building contractors that they "had a case" against the high taxes on undeveloped urban sites.

In both cases he immediately set up a committee of high Government officials to consider the problems involved. His aim is undoubtedly to lighten specific tax burdens.

All these steps were taken within so short a period that the impresion has been gained of a new tax deal in the offing. The Ministry realises that the over-all tax burden is too heavy for an increase in investments and is, in the circumstances, a drag on consumption as well as on production.

Yet, unless something is done about the rates of income and company tax any other reliefs will amount to very slight palliatives. Of every Israeli pound earned in a normal enterprise (and even approved enterprises become normal enterprises after five to ten years), only the equivalent of eight pence the equivalent of 8d remains for any shareholder earning more than the equivalent of 1,000 a year, after all direct taxes have been paid.

Sermon for the week

GOD'S NAME

from Maimonides

Whoever breaks any of the commands of the Torah without being compelled to do so but disdainfully and out of spite, profanes God's names. It is for this reason that with regard to a false oath Scripture says: so that thou profane the name of thy God: I am the Lord (Leviticus 191, 12). If the transgression took place when ten Jews were present the transgressor is guilty of profaning God's name in public.

Conversely, whoever refuses to sin or whoever performs a good deed out of no other motive in the world - neither out of fear nor to acquire fame - but for the sake of the Creator, blessed be He, as when Joseph kept himself apart from his master's wife, such a person sanctifies God's name.

If, for instance, he buys something without paying for it on the spot, even though he can well afford to do so, and when the bills are presented he postpones payment. Or if he is over-frivolous or associates with ignorant men to eat and drink with them. Or if his conversation with people is ungentle and he fails to greet them cheerfully but is quarrelsome and quick-tempered and other things of like nature.

In proportion to the greatness of the sage so is it needful for him to be strict with himself and go beyond the formal requirements of the law.

Conversely, if a sage is strict with himself and speaks pleasantly to people and is friendly, welcoming people with a cheerful countenance. If he refuses to insult others even when they insult him. If he respects them even when they despise him. If his dealings are all honest. If he does not spend too much time dining and frequenting the company of ignorant men.

If he is never seen otherwise than studying the Torah, wrapped in a garment with fringes, adorned with tephilin and going even beyond the requirements of the law in all he does (provided that he does not become a repellent extremist) so that everyone praises him and loves him and desires to emulate him, such a person sanctifies God's name.

Regarding a person of this kind Scripture says: And He said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified (Isaiah 49, 3).

The above is an English version from a chapter of Maimonides (1135 - 1204), Hilchot Yesode Hatorah.

Jews In Arab Lands

TUNISIA UNEASY

by our JCNS Correspondent.

In spite of public assurances from President Bourguiba and pleas from the Tunisian Chief Rabbi, the country's Jewish community remains restive.

Since the sacking on June 5 of the main synagogue and scores of Jewish shops, Jews have been emigrating at the rate of 200 to 300 a week. Those who remain are uneasy about the future.

The Jewish community's position has been deteriorating since Tunisia became independent in 1956. The one-day riots, triggered by the Arab-Israeli conflict, merely accelerated the process.

The size of Tunisia's Jewish community has always been a matter of contention. At the time of independence, in 1956. The one-day riots, estimates ranged between 50,000 to more than 100,000. By early this year the number was down to an estimated 10,000 to 20,000.

Tunisia's President Bourguiba.

The bulk of Tunisia's Jews live in Tunis. Francophile, they were traditionally strong in the professions as well as in commerce. In contrast, at Hournt-Souk on the island of Djerba, there is a community made up of descendants of those Jews who fled Jerusalem at the time of its destruction by Titus in 70 A.D. They are industrious, ultra-traditional, and of modest means. In appearance, many of them are almost indistinguishable from their Arab neighbours.

The Jews to whom I have spoken attribute their declining numbers to several inter-acting factors. First, there is their identification with the French.

During the 75 years of the French protectorate, many Jews took French citizenship and in other ways associated themselves with the French overlords. During Tunisia's struggle for independence, and during the bloody Bizerta crisis in 1961, the feeling arose - not without some justification - that the Jews' sympathies were with the French.

A Jewish Peace Corps volunteer (there are some 20 Jews with the Peace Corps in Tunisia) held that some Tunisian Jews, like the French settlers, brought difficulties on themselves "by their condescending attitude towards the Tunisian Arabs". This, the volunteer said produced unpleasant reactions.

Then there are Tunisia's economic difficulties. The imposition of rigid currency and trade restrictions, and the generally depressed state of the economy, sent many Jews looking for greener pastures.

Expanding Government involvement in the economy and in social services has put the squeeze on the private sectors where Tunisian Jews felt at home.

There is, too, an element of discrimination. Though equal in the eyes of Tunisian law, Jews are subject in practice to many forms of unofficial, often petty, discrimination. They do not get a fair share in employment, especially at the better jobs (for which they feel themselves qualified) in the growing public sector.

Their identification cards are marked in a special way to denote they are Jews. There are long, unexplained delays in handling routine applications for licences and other documents. It is prudent for the Jewish businessman to have a Moslem partner; otherwise he is at a disadvantage in dealing with Government bodies.

The Jews did not consider the existence of Israel to be an underlying cause of their problems. "It would be much the same with or without Israel", one said. "Something like June 5 just makes it a bit worse. It doesn't change the basic situation. Our main problem is that we are not Moslems".

* Mai Britt, wife of Sammy Davis, is resuming her acting career.

* The Israeli Cabinet approved a plan for "emergency" television service providing three hours in Arabic and one in Hebrew each evening, using the present facilities of the Rothschild Educational Television. It is hoped that Knesset approves the service which will start at the beginning of the new year.

* Barbra Streisand is a stickler for perfection. Even if her director is satisfied with a scene, she isn't

In private life too she is difficult. She is uncooperative to cameramen.

* Comedian Bert Lahr will play the key role of Spats, the retired burlesque straight ed Minsky's.

* French-Jewish actress Michele Lebray is in England starring in, The Shop on the High Street, which made Ida Kaminska last year's favorite.

* Israel's most popular woman is not Mrs. Eshkol, not Yael Dayan, not Mrs. Golda Meir--but Naomi Shemer, composer of the most successful song, Jerusalem the Golden.

* Dana Andrews' friends wish he would leave New York and return to Hollywood. New York does not agree with him.

* Kirk Douglas is bravely making, The Mafia, in Sicily, Mafialand. He doesn't disguise himself either.

* A musical version is being made of Max Beerbohm's, The Happy Hypocrite. It will mark the producing debut of Mildred Dana, mother of Barbara Dana, an actress married to Alan Arkin.

* Robert Merrill, who will star in La Traviata at Covent Gardens next month, will not perform during Yom Kippur. Topol also will take off from Fiddler during Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur. Miriam Karlin, Topol's co-star, will not appear on Yom Kippur.

* When Bennett Cerf visited Expo recently, people approached him, said they recognized him from his television program.

"Oh, you mean, What's My Line?"

"No," they said, "Front Page Challenge," on which he appeared in Toronto.

Recently, when Cerf was in the new Israeli Museum grounds, he noticed the walks "gravelly" and could be improved.

"Why don't you pave them?" he asked Teddy Kolleck, the mayor.

"We've run out of money."

Cerf paid to have walks paved.

A few days after the six-day war ended, he received a cable from Mayor Kolleck: "Now the windows are broken."

Cabled back Cerf, "How much?"

* According to singer Frankie Vaughan who is making a comeback, there is little wrong with Jewish youth. He feels that Jewish young people are, on the whole, well protected against "hippie" influences by the strength and unity of their family life. He firmly rejects any suggestion that this much-vaunted Jewish family unity might be breaking down or that any changes are discernible in the moral standards of Jewish youth.

"I do quite a lot of work among juvenile delinquents, and I rarely come across a Jewish boy or girl who is in need of any corrective training. I do not think that the problem of the 'flower people' applies to Jewish youngsters."

Vaughan deplores the tendency of some young people to embrace mystic Eastern religions in preference to their own. For making religion meaningful to Jewish youngsters, Vaughan says, "Knowledge and understanding of the Jewish way of life are the problems of the parents; study and religion are the problems of the synagogue. I feel too little is being done, generally, to interest our youth in Judaism.

"It is all very well for teachers to be kosher and religious, but they must be students of human nature as well as of the Law and they must know how to communicate with young people."

A sum equivalent to more than $24,000 has been presented to Youth Aliyah by the German "Labour Welfare Organisation" to be used for relief work among disabled Jewish children in Kiryat Yearim.

The money was raised by an appeal during and after the Six-Day War. Lotte Lemke, the chairman of the organisation, said that it was the only body to appeal specifically on behalf of Israel.

Writers In The News

Graham Greene in Israel

Jerusalem, (JCNS) Graham Greene, the author, arrived here on Sunday with the comment:

"Everyone ought to see Israel at least once in a lifetime".

He does not plan to write a book about his experiences, but he "might write an article or two" after his month's stay.

NO BAN ON WIESENTHAL BOOK

Minich, (JCNS) There have been no attempts so far to ban Mr. Simon Wiesenthal's book "The Murderers Are Among Us" in West Germany, the Munich publishing firm of Droemer and Knaur announced.

The firm is publishing the German edition of the book under the title "Doch die Muerder Ieben". A spokesman said they had received a number of complaints from individuals against the publication of the book, as well as from lawyers, since a condensation appeared in "Der Spiegel" recently.

However, the spokesman added, not one of the ex-S.S. officers mentioned in the book has asked for a ban so far.

Meanwhile, Mr. Wiesenthal said this week in Vienna that the former S.S. officer Erich Rajakovitch, who now lives in Austria, had taken legal action against the book, alleging libel.

Rajakovitch had been in charge of the "Jewish Emigration Centre" in Holland in 1941-1942.

LAUNCHED WOMEN'S ISRAEL BONDS CAMPAIGN - Participants of the "Salute to Women Leaders" at a luncheon which launched Toronto's Israel Bonds Campaign, Thursday, September 21st, at Beth Tzedec Synagogue, are: (left to right) Mrs. Irving Sussman, associate chairman, Women's Division, State of Israel Bonds of Toronto; Mrs. Irving Posluns, chairman, "Salute to Women Leaders"; Col. Honor scrolls for leadership roles were awarded. Col. Tamir was guest speaker.

WILLING BUT NOT ABLE

Old man Lefkowitz lay dying and asked that the rabbi be called. His grief-stricken family huddled around the bed. The old man took his wife's hand and with eyes half-closed said faintly, "Is our eldest son, Maxie, here?"

"Yes, papa, I'm here."

"And Avram, is he here."

"Yes, papa, I'm here too."

"And Louie, is he by the bed too?"

"Yes, papa, I'm here."

"You're here too? So who's minding the store?"

Dr. Erhard To Visit Israel.

Bonn, (JCNS) The former West German Chancellor, Dr. Ludwig Erhard, has accepted an invitation from the Israeli Government to visit the Jewish State later this year, according to well informed circles here. He is expected to go next month or early in November.

Dr. Erhard was invited to visit Israel some years ago by the head of the Israeli Mission in Cologne, but he could not at the time take advantage of the offer.

STARS AS PRIME MINISTER - Alistair Sim, who portrays the Prime Minister in, Number 10 Downing Street, a drama concerning a fictional Parliamentary crisis in Great Britain. The play will be presented at Toronto's O'Keefe Center for two weeks, commencing Monday, October 16th.

On Nathan Phillips Square, on the following dates:
Friday, October 13th next, the 411th Auxiliary Squadron R.C.A.F. Band, under the direction of F/L. Bernard Clarke.
Also, on Friday, October 20th, the Royal Regiment of Canada Band, under the direction of Captain S. H. Clarke, will be presented.
Both of these excellent Toronto Bands are playing in conjunction with "British Week" in Toronto.
Monday, October 16th and Tuesday, October 17th will see the spectacular display of colour and flare of a full regimental band, combined with the stirring sounds of the pipes and drums. The Scots Guards is one of the oldest British Regiments, having been first raised in 1642 in Scotland. The pipers who will be appearing in Toronto come from both battalions of the Scots Guards, which are at present stationed in Edinburgh and in Dusseldorf, Germany. It is no surprise that the regimental band combined with the Scots Guards is one of the great military bands, the Welsh Guards. The Welsh Guards Band is no stranger to Toronto, and has been here probably more than any other non-Canadian Band, having played here in 1948 and again in 1953. The Band will be conducted by their popular Director of Music, Captain H. A. Kenny, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

WEST BANK ARABS AT THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY

by Israel Neumann

Wasif, a 21-year-old Arab student living in the Old City of Jerusalem, studied law at the American University of Beirut last year. This year, Beirut is closed to him, so he will study at the Hebrew University instead.

He will be one of thirty Arab students from eastern Jerusalem, Bethlehem and the West Bank at the university. Eleven of them enrolled at the beginning of the summer, early enough to take part in an intensive Hebrew course, together with about 350 students from abroad, most of them American.

"We accept any Arab student, wherever he may come from, if he has the necessary qualifications," your correspondent was told by Dr. Yehezkel Cohen, dean of students at the Hebrew University.

NOT PRESENT

However, all the Arab students from the occupied territories are from Jerusalem or its immediate surroundings - Bethlehem and Ramallah. There are none from such places as Jenin, Tulkarm, Nablus, Jericho and other towns and villages.

Dr. Cohen comments: "Evidently, with the unification of the city, Jerusalem Arabs feel that the present situation in the city is permanent. Elsewhere on the West Bank students, like the rest of the population, doubtless feel that the status of the territory may change in the near future and wish to refrain from doing anything for which they may later be held to account.

Further questions on whether all the West Bank Arabs were free to leave their homes elicited an admission from Dr. Cohen: "I believe that students from the West Bank need a permit from the military authority."

He added: "This is not our concern and I have no idea of the policy of the military authorities. But I can tell you that our decision to open the university to Arab students from the occupied territories has been taken with the knowledge and even the approval of the Government."

SCHOLARSHIPS

A student's fees amount to about 740 pounds a year - must less than the fees at Israel's secondary schools, but still rather high for families with low incomes. Dr. Cohen expressed confidence that some Arab students from poor families would obtain scholarships.

Last year, 242 Arab students from Israel attended the Hebrew University, out of a total of 12,000 students. What particular problems did they face? "Their main difficulties lay in finding living accommodation and work," said the dean. "We tried to overcome this by accommodating an unusually high proportion of them in the students' hostel and also by giving them, as far as possible, jobs inside the university."

The University of Jerusalem paid a heavy toll in the Six-Day War: 43 students, six members of the teaching staff and three members of the administration were killed in action and a number wounded. How many will be known when the new academic year begins.

CHERRY HEERING

PRODUCED BY PETER F. HEERING

Cherry Heering first made in Copenhagen in 1818, is still being made in exactly the same way, in exactly the same place by the Heering family.

Cherry Heering is made from plump black Danish cherries. Its rich, dark cerise bouquet and flavor make it unique.

Cherry Heering is a liqueur whose cheerful cherry flavor ends a meal on just the right note. On ice or in tall drinks it is delectable. Poured over ice cream it makes a sensational dessert.

Cherry Heering is a Danish delight as popular as Danish pastry, as elegant as Danish furniture. Cherry Heering is Denmark's contribution to world friendship and international cheerfulness.

"Samaria and Judea" Instead of West Bank

Jerusalem, (JCNS) Kol Israel, the Israeli radio station now is using the descriptions "Samaria and Judea" instead of the geographical term "West Bank" in its references to former Jordanian territory now under Israeli occupation.

These references underline the historical Jewish associations with these territories.

HOLY SITES REVISITED

by Ruth Jordan

The best way to take in the true magnificence of Jerusalem is to look at it from the Mount of Olives. I first discovered it when taken to visit my grandfather's grave so many years ago. Many of the graves have since been demolished to make room for the Jordanian Inter-Continental luxury hotel, but the view is still unsurpassed.

The slope recedes in the ancient wall of the city, while behind it the golden globe of the Dome of the Rock and the silver dome of El-Aksa mosque focus attention. As I was watching the bricked-up Gate of Mercy (legend has it that the Turks blocked it up to stop the Messiah passing through), people were coming out of the adjacent Lions' Gate to stroll outside the wall.

A British soldier once stopped me there towards the end of the Second World War to ask if I could direct him to Gomer's Grave. Now I knew Absalom's Tomb down below, Jehosaphat's Tomb further on, and even Zechariah's Tomb far away, but Gomer was a name unknown to me. I appealed to my companions. Blank looks.

The young soldier explained that Gomer had been a lady of easy virtue, whom God in His wisdom had bestowed on the prophet Hosea. Her grave, he was sure, was somewhere there.

If it was, I never discovered it. There were too many other attractions, like the Vaults of the Kings, the Royal Dungeons, where the opposition Prophets were incarcerated, and the cave where King Zedekiah sought refuge.

Best of all was the walk over the city wall, built by the turks in 1517, on the foundations of the ancient wall. It was not possible to follow the same route this time, so I walked outside the wall instead. This familiar walk was less familiar than I had expected. The iron doors of the Jaffa Gate were shut, what with the rubble and the cleaning work. Instead, the crowds streamed in through the huge gap in the wall made in 1898, to allow Kaiser Wilhelm's carriage through.

The New Gate, bricked up by the British for security reasons, was now open, enabling me to re-enter the Old City through the quiet clean streets of the Christian quarter. A plaque commemorates the blasting open of this gate by the Israeli Army during the Battle of Jerusalem. Damascus Gate was as busy as ever, with Arab bus drivers trying to attract the attention of would-be passengers to Jericho by shouting at the top of their voices the Arab name of the place. "Arricha, Arricha:"

A gourmet never goes straight for the main dish, and when revisiting Old Jerusalem it seemed right to walk round it before entering it. Up Mount Scopus I went, noticing with surprise how well preserved the Villa Nashashibi was, the Nashashibis having been one of the aristocratic families among Palestinian Arabs. The Hebrew University buildings, retained by Israel after the 1948 cease-fire, but not used because in the midst of Jordanian territory, looked shrunken and derelict.

I crossed over to what was known as Truants' Bench, where some of us used to spend precious time admiring the magnificant view of the Old City below, instead of attending lectures. If was still there, intact, and sure to win back its use and name.

The amphitheatre overlooking the Judean Hills must have been conceived by a master-mind when it was built shortly after the First World War. Twenty years of disuse have not damaged the benches, with the characteristic sturdy shrubs growing in the cracks.

The view offered from the seats of craggy brownish hills merging into pink horizons, is still one of the most beautiful and peace-inducing I have ever seen. The amphitheatre has already been used once or twice for public performances but, remembering my experience of long ago, I doubt that any performance can distract one's attention from the enchantment of the scenery below.

Back from the heights of Mount Scopus, I delayed no longer and made straight for the Western Wall. The big stones, uncut by hand, still loom large, with the same sturdy little shrubs growing in the nocks. Years ago, when access was not easy, there were not many people about. Even if one did not press rolled bits of paper into the cracks, with personal requests to Providence, one had a feeling of past glory and future hope.

With the inevitable flow of large crowds and subsequent partitioning of the area into sections for worshippers, male and female, and visitors, the sense of closeness diminishes. Yet, turning to go, there is a tremendous feeling of elation. Some call it national fulfilment. Others call it simply an answer to two thousand years of prayer.

The Tower of David, which used to be a folk museum, was closed due to war damage. The Church of the Holy Sepulchre was supported by heavier scaffolding than it used to be, and sadly in need of repair. By contrast, the Armenian Church, in the Armenian quarter, remained a place of beauty and opulence. The old priest went out of his way to show his only two visitors round the place, rich with ceramics and gold.

"You wouldn't like to show us one of your illuminated manuscripts?" I ventured, reminding him of the recent near-sale at Sotheby's. Locking the heavy door behind him, he opened a drawer, produced a key, opened another drawer and brought out a bundle. With deft fingers he unfolded one wrap after another to reveal, in the end, one of the priceless manuscripts treasured by his Church for centuries.

At the Armenian pottery workmen were still celaning up the rubble caused by a shell. The once laden shelves were half empty, and the potter pointed sadly to strings of blue Hebron beads handing on the wall. "Each single bead is supposed to protect one from the Evil Eye", he wailed. "A fat lot of good they did me". Then he brightened up. He recalled his visits to Tel Aviv when he was a young man. I told him I still had one of his ceramics with the name Palestine painted over it. He told me he had just insured his car with an Israeli firm, and found the terms much more advantageous.

Rachel's Tomb, on the way to Bethlehem, was a shrine one used to go by, not into, during the British Mandate in Palestine. I used to go by it after a visit to Solomon's Pools where, for the equivalent of a penny, the young villagers turned a blind eye to our swimming in their drinking water.

This time we respected the pools and went inside the Tomb. Over-crowded, like the Cave of Machpelah I saw later in Hebron, it did not leave one a chance to contemplate. Some ladies, with their backs to the wall, were silently reading psalms. On the wall a plaque commemorates Sir Moses Montefiore who, in 1841, reconstructed the dilapidated twelfth-century Tomb.

The Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem has retained all its simple grandeur. Israeli visitors streamed past the Crib barely glancing at it, while two Christian worshippers knelt down and kissed the floor. Outside, the large square seemed strangely larger. There used to be a cafe right opposite, where pilgrims drank Turkish coffee, and where the suave waiter once offered me a red rose. "Demolished by the Army", a young Arab informed me, "together with my father's house, to make a larger car park."

Hebron was totally unknown territory to me, as to many people of my generation. It lives in history as the scene of several bloodbaths, and to walk unhindered into the Cave of Machpelah, burial place of Abraham and his family. In the bazaars the Hebronites were selling souvenirs, bargaining in newly acquired Hebrew. I imagined I saw the ancient murderous hostility behind each stall.

It was much better outside the town, in the midst of the fertile Hebron hills. Fruit vendors were tempting passing car-drivers with gorgeous plums, apples, peaches and water melons at ridiculously low prices. One green slope followed another. Villagers were spraying their fruit trees with modern insecticide. Some peasant women and children waved to us from the fields as the car sped past. It all seemed so peaceful. Will it ever be?

HUMAN RELATIONS

In-law Spats

by Dr. Rose Franzblau

QUESTION:

My brother refuses to speak with my husband due to a misunderstanding in business. My husband has made several attempts to end this bad feeling but to no avail.

My niece, my brother's daughter, is being married in two months and we were invited with our children. My husband refuses to attend, since the host has such hate for him.

I understand my husband's feelings, but our absence would hurt the bride and groom, my parents and our children.

What does one do in a situation like this?

ANSWER:

Some people will fight for a desired object, person or relationship only as long as it is unavailable or unattainable.

As long as there is a geographical distance, an involvement in another relationship, etc., the person is desired. When the person sought out and fought for is free at last, the one who was supposedly in love suddenly sees faults, defects and obstacles standing in the way.

This is also not uncommon where the couples are in great conflict in a marriage or are separated and contemplating divorce. They will follow through when advised to go for counseling to work out a possible reconciliation. But once peace appears within reach, all the old complaints, accusations and hostilities arise again, and the fight continues. Having made a show of good will, nobody now can accuse them of not having tried to keep the family together and they are now relieved of the guilt for the break-up which follows.

Sometimes, in a family, one of the grown-ups will do something hurtful or disloyal, under the guise of trying to be "helpful" or "honest". When the person attacked reacts with anger and indignation, the attacker apologizes and asks forgiveness on the grounds that he really meant well, or that he was misunderstood. He will ultimately begin to make overtures to resume the relationship and will continue as long as he is turned down. But the moment the victim softens up and becomes responsive, the attacker attacks again.

Deep down, they fear that the reconciliation will reveal them at their worst. Suffering from great distrust in themselves, they don't trust the other's friendliness.

It is a strange phenomenon that happy times are so often used to express hostility. A fight that has been simmering for a long time and has nothing to do with the celebration, may finally break out into the open on this occasion. The people most hurt by it are of course, the young ones who are being confirmed, graduated or married. They are shocked by the behavior of their elders, and wonder justifiably why they are being punished and why sins of their fathers are being visited upon them. No monetary gift can make up for the adulteration of the joy and happiness that should attend a great and important occasion like this.

Evidently it was money that was involved in this business misunderstanding between your husband and your brother. If so, whether one felt cheated by the other, or some expectation in business did not materialize due to some error or miscalculation on the part of the other, they should settle it in the realm of money.

Your husband may feel that he is in the right, but your brother's conclusion may be exactly the same. As long as the fight goes on there will always be doubt in everyone's mind about who was right, and who was wrong. But once the fight is settled, and family relationships are resumed, then the truth may emerge. It may turn out to be that it was a misunderstanding on the part of both - one promising too much or the other expecting more than was reasonable.

In extending the invitation, your brother has really opened the door for a reconciliation. He has said to your husband by this means, that the children in the family were more important than any disagreement between the elders. Your husband ought to accept graciously. He will not only think better of himself for having done so but will present a better image of himself both to your brother and to other members of the family.

Your children would be proud of their father, and the bridal couple's joy will be increased. Should your husband not be accorded full acceptance and warm treatment in return, it will reflect on the others and not on him.

By Arthur GOLDBERG

. . . I turn now to the Middle East, a second area of conflict which is both tragic in itself and dangerous to the peace of the world.

The views of the United States on the requirements of peace in the Middle East have been set forth by President Johnson, notably in his statement of June 19 which remains our policy. In that statement my Government appealed to all the parties to adopt no rigid view on the method of bringing peace to the area. Rather, we have emphasized throughout that there is something more basic than methods: the simple will to peace. There must be present on both sides an affirmative will to resolve the issues, not through the dictation of terms by either side, but through a process of mutual accommodation in which nobody's vital interests are injured. In short both sides must have the will to work out a political solution; both must be committed to peace; and no appropriate method, such as good offices or mediation, should be excluded.

EMERGENCY SESSION'S WORK

In candor it must be said that such a will to peace was not manifest in the recent emergency session of the Assembly. It is greatly to be hoped that, after sober reflection by all concerned, a new and better mood will emerge - a mood of reconciliation and magnanimity.

Surely the purposes of peace cannot be served if the right of a member state to its national life is not accepted and respected by its neighbors; nor if military success blinds a member state to the fact that its neighbors have rights and interests of their own.

In realism, it is perhaps not to be expected that reconciliation and magnanimity must at least give way to tolerance and to the will to live together in peace. Once that will is manifest, the terms of settlement can be evolved.

The principles which my Government believes can bring peace to the region are these:

Each nation in the area must accept the right of others to live. The least that this requires is that all should renounce any state or claim of belligerency, which as long ago as 1951 was found by the Security Council to be inconsistent with peace.

Troops must be withdrawn - and withdrawn in a context of peace. For some parties cannot be left free to assert the rights of war while others are called upon to abide by the rules of peace.

There must be justice for the refugees. The nations of the area must address themselves at last, with new energy and new determination to succeed, to the plight of those who have been rendered homeless or displaced by wars and conflicts of the past, both distant and recent.

Free and innocent passage through international waterways must be assured for all nations. One of the lessons of the recent conflict is that maritime rights must be respected.

The wasteful and destructive arms race in the region must be curbed, thereby making more resources available for economic development.

The status of Jerusalem must not be decided unilaterally but in consultation with all concerned, and in recognition of the historic interest of the three great religions in the Holy Places.

By Andrei A. GROMYKO

Can a solution be found for the problem of eliminating the consequences of the Israeli aggression? Undoubtedly, it can and the United Nations is called upon to play its part in this.

Due to the stand taken by those countries that encourage the policy of conquest, first and foremost the United States, the emergency session of the General Assembly failed to find a solution for the problem of eliminating the consequences of Israel's aggression, and above all, the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Arab territories they seized. It is well known, however, that in this or that form the overwhelming majority of States came out in condemnation of the aggressor's actions and in defence of the rights of the Arab States. The initiatives and efforts undertaken of late, notably in the capitals of Arab States, aimed at eliminating the consequences of the Israeli aggression meet with understanding on the part of the Soviet Union.

While condemning Israel's aggression, the Soviet Union sees the solution of the question above all in ensuring the withdrawal of Israel's forces behind the lines they occupied prior to last June 5th. It is further necessary that the Arab States--the U.A.R., Syria and Jordan--be reimbursed for the material damage inflicted upon them by Israel's aggression and by the continuing occupation of parts of their territories. Israel must comply with the United Nations decision on Jerusalem, otherwise the Jerusalem, otherwise the Security Council will have to take a decision on sanctions against Israel. The Soviet Union will be ready to participate in the implementation of that decision.

The Soviet Union is prepared to do its utmost at the General Assembly and in the Security Council in order to bring about the prompt elimination of the consequences of Israeli aggression--a demand that is profoundly just and in accord with the interests of peace in the Middle East.

Few of Tunisia's Jews could be considered ardent Zionists - though, as one put it, "we certainly share the view that Israel has a right to live". Few of the emigrating Jews head for Israel. The first destination usually is France; there is now a sizeable community of Tunisian Jews around Paris. Some hope to move on eventually to Canada or the United States.

Doctors and lawyers find it easier to pull up their roots than the merchants with their substantial fixed assets. For the latter it can be a choice between staying or leaving almost all their assets behind.

The remaining Jews are concerned not so much with themselves, but with what the future holds for their children. Many feel life here will be tolerable as long as 64-year-old President Bourguiba lives (He had a heart attack earlier this year). They do not know what to expect under successors.

I found Jewish opinion divided on the performance of the Bourguiba regime to date.

Some look on the President as their protector; they point to his quick denunciation of the June 5 hooligans, their subsequent arrest and imprisonment, and the Government's compensation for damage to the synagogue and shops (there has been some squabbling over the value of destroyed stock).

Others hold Bourguiba largely responsible for the underlying, long-term deterioration of the Jewish community's position. One said: "Our situation has grown worse and worse since 1956 - not officially, but really. The Government knows this, but has done nothing to stop it.

"If you ask Bourguiba why Jews who have been here 500 years are now leaving everything behind to emigrate, he pleads that he does not know. He says we have never been beaten or injured and are free to leave the country.

"The crux of the matter is that the important things in this country are directed from above. The Government controls the press. Bourguiba could use this control as a positive influence, but he doesn't. The United States could help if it wished, because Tunisia is living on American aid. I suppose the Embassy does not wish to upset Bourguiba".

Asked about the Jews in Tunisia, a Tunisian Minister said: "Our laws clearly are not discriminatory and we have denounced the regrettable incidents of June 5. But Jews feel they should leave when they don't feel at ease".

Western diplomats believe the rate of emigration should decline as the excitement of the June 5 aftermath recedes. Some Jews report that Arab friends and associates have apologised for the incidents; others say they were shunned by Arabs for most of the summer, and that a thaw came only gradually

CHIEF RABBI

SANCTIONS AGAINST INTERMARRIAGE?

London, (JCNS) Jews should not allow any question of public relations to deter them from taking a firm stand Chief Rabbi Dr. I. Jakobovits, said last week.

Until recent times, he said, the reluctance of non-Jews to marry Jews was one of the factors that helped to keep down the incidence of intermarriage. Today, however, outside resistance had broken down, and world opinion propagated the blurring of differences and distinctions between peoples and religions.

"To maintain our attitude on intermarriage in modern times requires a carefully planned and courageously executed defiance of conformity - and nothing is more difficult in this age of conformity than to defy it", Dr. Jakobovits said.

"It may become becessary, as a deterrent", Dr. Jakobovits stated, "to exercise such sanctions as will prevent the situation from being accepted, and from public honours being given where there has been public dishonour and disgrace.

"I also find it indefensible that jewish clubs formed to promote Jewish consciousness among youth should encourage or permit a religiously promiscuous membership that often increases the risk of intermarriage".

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

COCONUT OATMEAL COOKIES

1/2 cup butter
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup brown sugar
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup flour
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 cup quick-cooking rolled oats
1 cup flaked coconut or 3/4 cup grated coconut.

Preheat the oven to 375 degrees. Cream butter and gradually beat in sugars until mixture is light and fluffy. Beat in egg and vanilla very well.

Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and baking soda. Add in four parts to the batter. Mix the oats and coconut.

Drop by teaspoonfuls onto ungreased baking sheets. Bake 9 to 12 minutes or until golden.

They Get There

by Ruthie

If you have children under age ten, you know what I mean when I say they drive you up a limb.

From a boy it's upgerret (unspoken). China and fine crystal are automatically hidden away. In fact, it is advisable not to buy good furniture until they get married unless you can afford to refurbish, say, every other year or so.

One little boy I know loves to play hide and seek behind the draperies — silk, no less. And while he's there he suddenly has to make.

That kid's been spanked, I don't know how many times. But nothing helps. His parents will give him the biggest party if they live to see him grow up.

Another three-year-old gets up with the chickens. He just won't sleep, period. He's learned not to disturb his mother and father. But the other dawn he almost woke the dead.

Suddenly there was a big crash. As his mother relates it, the first thought this side consciousness was — a plane crash? An earthquake? An invasion from outer space? A clumsy burglary?

When their minds cleared, they realized it could have been only one thing — sonny getting into mischief. But what?

Nu, to cut the long story short, their nakhessl (joy) padded into the kitchen, pulled a chair next to the cupboard, climbed onto it, opened a closet door, tried to pull out a cup — you guessed it. The whole stack of dishes went tumbling all over the place. It's a ness (miracle) nothing happened to the child.

And that was one of the times he didn't get it. Because nothing helps short of a reform school, according to the doting papa.

But I don't think that stunt will be repeated because the kid was nearly shaken out of his wits.

Another time the same brat did something else, mild in comparison.

In the middle of the night he played with the bathroom lock. And he tinkered so long that the door locked, fortunately with him on the outside.

Nu, ver hut gekennt oishalten (who could hold out)? Luckily the door didn't have to be broken in. And, oif zulukhess (just for spite), everybody had to go to the bathroom just then.

* * * * *

So maybe with girls it's easier. But when they're becoming teenagers — vay, vay!

Heather is at that stage now. And, let me tell you something, If I live through this, I'll live forever.

It seems like yesterday when I checked her neck to see if it was washed along with her face; her hair looked like a rat's nest if I didn't brush it myself and she couldn't care less if her socks had holes or not. Moreover dirt and she were synonymous.

I always said she took after her Auntie Mae. Anything Mae wore, no matter how clean, on her it looked dirty. She loved to grovel in earth. If she was lost, Mama always knew where to find her — down by the railroad tracks.

And that's my Heather all over again.

But lately! She's all of twelve and can hardly wait till she's thirteen.

"Mommy, I'm almost a teenager. Oh, boy!"

You should see the sudden turnabout! "Mommy, am I too fat? Aren't my skirts too long? I wore that once already. I need to have my hair set. I won't shorten my fingernails. Can I get heels? Can I date when I'm thirteen, only in the daytime? If you won't let me, I'll grow up to be a social outcast. This year I have to fast on Yom Kippur."

And one thought runs into another endlessly like a broken record.

You begin to think, "Where's my baby? How fast they grow up." And you brace yourself for the mental onslaughts.

* * * * *

Like Mama always sighs, "The faigelakh (little birds) are already trying their wings."

JEWISH LIFE IN THE SAHARA

By Victor Malka.

Casablanca, Rabat, Fez, Marrakesh - anyone who has been to Israel has met Jews from these Moroccan cities and a great deal is known of their life and customs while they still lived in Morocco.

But how many people have heard of Taourirt, Tineghir, Zerkent or Ouarzazate, remote, primitive villages on the edge of the Sahara in Southern Morocco? These, too, and others, have their Jewish communities, many of whom are now leaving the Middle Ages behind them and making a leap into the twentieth century, in Israel.

Only 30 years ago, the Jews of Southern Morocco lived in virtual slavery. The French administration had not yet extended its firm hold on the area, and the old customs prevailed. Every Jew was the serf of a Moslem, who, in turn, became the "protector" of his slave's family.

The Moslem was the official guardian of the interests of the Jewish family he "owned," and they paid him a regular tribute of several gold coins for his "protection." When a Jewish girl reached marriageable age - about ten years old, generally speaking - the explicit permission of the family's Moslem protector had to be obtained before she could be married. For this, too, payment in gold was exacted.

Today, these Jewish communities are fast disappearing, as their members make their way northwards, eventually to emigrate to Israel.

Last month, together with a cameraman, I visited some of them. I found that a number of places, Taourirt, for example, had no rabbi, no shochet and nobody to give religious instruction of any kind.

The synagogue in Taourirt is in a kind of grotto, with some dim daylight filtering in through a hole in the roof. There is no electricity, of course, and candles are used for illumination when darkness falls. When it rains in Taourirt, the raindrops spatter the Scrolls of the Law in the synagogue.

The mellah (Jewish ghetto) is a scene of dilapidation, squalor and misery. About 15 families still live there, 150 people making some kind of living as cobblers, jewellery craftsmen, joiners and artisans. These trades are passed on from father to son. There had even been a wandering Jewish camel driver once, whose home was in the Taourirt mellah, but he had left the country.

Jewish tradition survives strongly in the village, but superstition has become intermingled with rabbinic teaching, so that it is now difficult to say where superstition ends and religion begins.

Some years ago, a university man who made a serious study of the Jews of Southern Morocco, M. Pierre Flamand, asserted that there was a Jewish community there which celebrated Ramadhan (an Arab month of fasting, commemorating the handing down of the Koran) as a Jewish holy festival, but I heard nothing of any such practice in the village in question.

The Jewish communities of Southern Morocco are a veritable treasure-house of folk-lore and tradition to which the overwhelming majority of them have remained faithful. They have preserved their ancient usages and customs and their traditional costume, but these will all disappear as the communities disperse.

Soon, it will be impossible to tell the difference between a Jewish and a non-Jewish cemetery in Southern Morocco. I visited that at Tineghir, famous for the great rabbis buried there. It lies in the middle of the desert, unmarked and with no boundary wall. There was no inscription on any of the graves.

Before long the desert Jews of Morocco will be little more than a memory, but before the final chapter is written, some record will have been made for posterity. A foreign film unit is due to start shooting some time this month. But however colourful it may turn out to be, it cannot hope to give more than an indication of the vitality and unusual qualities of Southern Morocco's Jewish communities.
